COUNTY PEOPLE ATTEND PICNIC

Annual Adams County Picnic at Mount Holly Park Takes Large Numbers of People to Pretty Cumberland County Resort.

Eight hundred Adams County people from the northern and western sections of the county took in the big annual picnic at Mount Holly Park today, the event proving the success which it has always been in the past.

The special train carrying the picnicers left Gettysburg at 7.15 with about ninety people on board. At all the stations along the route large crowds were added, several hundred getting on at some of the stations. The train carried fourteen cars and was drawn by two large engines. The regular trains during the day took over many more and the crowd was not far from reaching the record.

Mount Holly Park has never been prettier and has never had more attractions than this year. A large roller coaster, boating, dancing, bowling, base ball, fishing, mountain climbing and many other things occupied the attention of the Adams County people who were taking their annual day off at the Cumberland County resort. The picnic lunches, for which Adams County housewives are famous, were on hand in quantity and abundance and the refreshment part of the day was not in any way neglected.

While about ninety five per cent of the people were busy with pleasure, the other five were at the picnic for real business and lost no time in getting about. Candidates were more or less numerous and were eager to advance their claims. Representatives of the Gettysburg Chautauque were there, too, and told of the various attractions to be offered in the big tent August 18 to 27.

F. Starner, Mr. and Mrs. M. F. Stoner.

CLASS REUNION

MANY AUTOISTS VISIT FIELD

Two Hundred and Fifty Automobile Parties in Three Days Latest Record for Tourist Traffic on the Battlefield.

The visit of no less than two hundred and fifty automobiles to the battlefield in the past three days is an indication of the rapid increase of that form of travel to this point.

Tab is kept on all automobiles visiting the battlefield by the guards on the avenues who take the license numbers of all machines. Their figures indicate that one hundred and fifty cars were on the avenues Sunday, forty on Monday and sixty on Tuesday. This is exclusive of all local cars.

Scarcely any of the guards get the numbers of all the machines which visit the field on any particular day as they may be on one portion of their section while a machine is touring another portion and they never get to see it. The trade is growing heavier all the time and there has been a notable increase during the past ten days.

That many of these automobile parties never get into town is very apparent. Many of them enter the battlefield from one direction, tour the principal avenues and then proceed on their way without ever coming through the town. Others pass through but do not stop, in fact the majority of the machines do not stop here but simply take in the battlefield as a side tour in a trip not having this as an objective point.

MARK FOR BURGLARS

Joseph Rang, residing in McSherrystown, has been the victim of a number of burglaries during the past few years. The first time that his home was entered was about two years ago, when the thieves broke open a daughter's bank and took the contents, about one dollar. At the same time a number of other valuables had been wrapped in a bundle, but the robbers were scared off before they could get away with the plunder. The second time the burglars broke into the dwelling but were very likely scared away because nothing was missed from the premises. On Monday morning Mr. Rang again discovered somebody prowling about the premises, but the supposed burglars took flight when they found out that they were seen.

MUCH ACTIVITY AT NEW CHURCH

Brick Work at St. James Lutheran Church Started. Steel almost All in Place. Other Work Progressing rapidly.

Work was started this morning on the brick work of the new St. James church and activity at the building is making rapid progress. The bricks of the Auburn Shale Brick Company are being used with a red brown mortar.

All of the structural steel has been placed with the exception of the pillars to carry the large 60 x 15 girders which will support the roof over the main auditorium room. These pillars are here ready to be placed but the girders have not yet been received. They are so large that they will either have to be admitted before the wall goes up very far or else dropped down above the wall after it is put up as there will be no entrance to the building sufficiently large to admit their entrance.

The beams and joists for the main auditorium room are about all in place and the first layer of boards has been laid. Under the Sunday School room steel was used owing to the several galleries which will accommodate the various class rooms and cause greater strain on the floor.

The window frames have been received from the Hollinger mills at Chambersburg. Work at placing the door frames is now in progress and the place is rapidly taking on a scene of busy activity.

The new church is being watched with much interest by the people of town and large numbers of visitors have inspected the place the past week or more.

The walls of the parsonage have been completed and now await further work.

LINCOLN MONUMENT

The Commission on Fine Arts, Tuesday recommended that the $2,000,000 memorial to Abraham Lincoln, in Washington take the form of a monument in Potomac Park on the same axis as the capitol and the Washington monument. A design for the memorial, the report says, has not yet been selected.

"It is impossible," reads the report, "to over-estimate the importance of giving to a monument of the size and significance of the Lincoln memorial complete and undisputed domination over a large area, together with a certain dignified isolation from competing structures or even from minor features unrelated to it. Upon no other possible site in the City of Washington can this end be secured so completely as upon the Potomac Park site."

The commission found that a memorial upon this location would not need to be so high as to bring it into competition with the Washington monument, since it would stand on a "broad plain surrounded by an amphitheater of hills," and would be as widely seen and as impressive as upon a hilltop.

OVER NIAGARA IN A BARREL

Bobby Leach Escapes With a Broken Leg.

HE DROPPED 158 FEET

At a Point 400 Feet From the Canadian Shore He Plunged Over Falls Into the Air Charged Waters.

Niagara Falls, N. Y., July 26. — "Bobby" Leach is the second person to go over the Horseshoe Falls of Niagara and live to tell the story. He made the trip while a large number of people watched the spectacle from both sides of the river.

Leach sent his barrel-boat of steel up the river along the New York side and he was taken well into the Canadian channel. The launch towed the barrel far down stream, and it was not until the danger point for boats had been reached that the barrel was closed and Leach was set adrift. He was still a long distance from the upper rapids, and sluggishly the currents drew him on.

Lazily the man with ambition for fame swept on, quite hopeless to hasten the result. Into the upper rapids and over the reefs the strange craft went, and then Leach knew he was speeding toward the dropping off place. An eddy current drew him near shore opposite the power plant of the Electrical Development company, but the currents that hurry toward the falls were stronger and on them Leach continued the journey. From this point it was quick work.

Faster and faster the waters carried him, and then at a point 400 feet out from the Canadian shore they dropped out from under him and let him drop 158 feet into the waters of the gorge right where they boil and toss in their maddened whiteness at the foot of the waterfall.

The barrel went out of sight. A moan went up from the watching humanity, as thousands of eyes watched for the reappearance of the barrel speck on the waters that rush out from the downpour. Seconds seemed hours, but the barrel came in sight again quickly and then the gorge currents picked it up and swept it well toward the Canadian side.

There friends were waiting, and as the barrel swung into an eddy Frank Bender plunged into the river and swam out to it. He caught it and pushed it toward shore, where others helped take Leach from the barrel. He was conscious, but as he was taken out it was evident that his left leg was broken, while he was in a badly shaken condition. His realization of having made the trip successfully was sufficient, despite the stimulants taken to enable him to wade to those on the cliff tops, and he was placed on a stretcher and hurried up the bank and home.

Leach was set adrift at 2:55 o'clock, and it was exactly 3:13 o'clock when he made the plunge over the brink. Twenty-two minutes later he was taken from the barrel in the gorge. About all he was able to say was that he was all right and that he was in safety. As Leach has been through the whirlpool rapids several times, and has dropped from the upper steel arch bridge, his trip over the Horseshoe makes him king of the Niagara performers.

TO VOTE ON RECIPROCITY

Conservatives Declare Canadian People Must Decide.

Ottawa, Ont., July 26.—That reciprocity with the United States will have to get the endorsement of the voters of Canada was the decision of a party caucus of the Conservatives.

"No backdown, but continued obstruction of the reciprocity measure until the government is forced to dissolve parliament and go to the country," was, in effect, the ultimatum.

The Liberal caucus thereupon decided that the election should be held as soon as possible.

There may be dissolution of parliament within a fortnight, but possibly not until the end of August.

The election probably will be held the last week in September or the first week in October. Parliament will be called immediately after the election.

If the government is returned the reciprocity bill will be put through without difficulty.

WILL PASS WOOL BILL TOMORROW

Senate to Put the Issue Up to President.

Washington, July 26.—As the result of a series of conferences held the prediction was freely made in the senate that the upper house of congress tomorrow would adopt the house wool bill.

This will put the wool issue squarely up to President Taft. Democratic Leader Underwood served notice that the house would not accept the LaFollette bill.

While President Taft in a recent speech denounced schedule K, wool and woolsens, of the Payne-Aldrich law as "indispensable," he also has indicated that he would prefer to have a revision of the schedule to await the report of the tariff board, promised in December. The president has not definitely indicated, however, that he will use the veto power.

The positive statement was made by senators professing to know that at least five insurgent Republicans and one regular Republican would take the house measure if they could not get the LaFollette bill.

This would insure a majority for that measure. The Republican leaders also received this information and several of them expressed the opinion that the house wool bill would pass the senate.

Senator Poinsett predicted that the house bill would in the end be accepted. He said he would vote for the LaFollette measure as a substitute, but in case of its failure he would cast his ballot for the house bill. He said that Senators Clapp, Brown and others felt as he did.

SAVING SOULS COSTLY

Billy Sunday Rates Indianapolis as Highest City in Country.

Winona Lake, July 26.—Billy Sunday, the base ball evangelist, who is conducting a series of meetings here, has made a careful calculation as to the saving of souls in large cities, and he rates Indianapolis as the highest of any city in the country.

"It costs $620 to save one soul in Indianapolis," he said. In New York city the cost is $545, in Boston $450, in Denver $425, in Chicago $394, in New Orleans $78, in Atlanta $75.

The figures, he explained, were made by taking the amount given for the maintenance of churches and the number of accessions to the churches and making a simple division.

Deny Bank Will Control Two Trusts.

ADMIT WIRE TRUST CHARGE

Thirty-Seven Manufacturers Plead Guilty.

FINED $1000 TO $1700 EACH

Defendants Conducted Nine Pools to the Restraint of Trade in the Wire Business.

New York, July 26.—Thirty-seven of the eighty-four wire manufacturers and their employees, who were indicted by the grand jury here on June 29 on the charge of combining in nine pools to the restraint of trade in the wire business, entered pleas of nolo contendere before Judge Archbald in the criminal branch of the United States circuit court and each was fined $1000 on the initial count and $100 on every additional count in the indictment against him.

The total amount of the fines imposed is $42,700.

By entering this plea the defendants practically admitted that they are conducting a combination in restraint of trade.

The first defendants to plead were F. W. Roebbing, of Roebbing Sons company; Alfred F. Moore, of Philadelphia; Frank J. Newbury, Joseph H. B. Peltin, Thomas Wallace, Jr., Louis F. Anfulz and Newell B. Parson, all members of the Fine Wire Magnet association, as their pool was called. They were fined $1000 each.

Later the other nineteen men, representing two other pools, entered their pleas of nolo contendere. They were fined sums ranging from $1000 to $1700.

Judge Archbald overruled every protest of District Attorney Wise.

When the pleas of these seven men had been recorded and it came to passing of sentence District Attorney Wise urged that there were nine distinct violations charged against all of the defendants and that in his opinion instead of the imposition of a fine of $1000 against each of the defendants, they might be fined $1000 apiece for each of the violations.

Judge Archbald replied that he could not bring himself to see it that way, and in the cases of the Rubber Covered Wire association members he imposed a fine of $1000 for the first violation and $1000 for each of the other violations.

Ferdinand W. Roebbing, of John A. Roebbing's Sons, who was indicted as a member of each of the nine pooling associations, except the horse shoe manufacturers, topped the list of fine payers with $1700.

FIND WATCH IN ALLIGATOR

Is Believed to Solve Mystery of Missing Twelve-Year-Old Girl.

Forsyth, Ga., July 26.—The finding of a valuable gold watch and chain in the stomach of a large alligator that died in a pond near here is believed to solve the mystery of the disappearance of twelve-year-old Janet Thomson from the home of her parents at Island Grove, Fla., two years ago.

The alligator was captured near Island Grove some weeks after the girl disappeared and was brought to Forsyth by J. M. Jackson.

The little girl has never been heard from since she disappeared. When last seen she was standing on the banks of the lake where Jackson captured the alligator, and she was wearing at the time a gold watch of the Waltham make, with her initials engraved on the back of the watch. The same initials are on the back of the watch discovered on the inside of the dead alligator.

It is believed by Jackson and others that while the girl was playing on the bank of the lake the alligator came upon the bank and devoured her.

POPE NOT SO WELL

Physicians Find His Temperature Is Higher, But Not Alarmingly So.

Rome, July 26.—The condition of the pope, who is suffering from a sore throat, is less satisfactory.

Dr. Petacoli, the pontiff's private physician, and Dr. Marchisiani, consulting physician at the Vatican, found their patient with a temperature higher than that of Tuesday, when a slight rise above the normal was noted.

The general symptoms, it is said, are not alarming.

Ice Cream Full of Bacteria.

Boston, July 26.—Announcement that 55,000,000 bacteria had been found in a half spoonful of ice cream by the Boston health authorities caused the declaration by Professor James O. Jordan, of the board of health, that he would ask the legislature to pass an emergency measure providing that the frozen delicacy must hereafter be sold and served only in original packages. The sample was purchased in the north end tenement district.

Edna Goodrich Freed.

New York, July 26.—Supreme Court Justice Bischoff granted a final decree in the divorce action brought by Mrs. Edna Goodrich Goodwin against Na Goodwin, the actor. The action was tried last winter and the referee recommended that a decree be granted Mrs. Goodwin. The actor is barred from marrying during the life time of Mrs. Goodwin.

PENNA. ANIMALS WORTH $147,371,000

An Increase of 38 Per Cent. in Ten Years.

Washington, July 26.—Domestic animals, poultry and bees increased $38,923,000 in value, or from $102,439,000 to $141,371,000 during the ten years from 1900 to 1910, in Pennsylvania. The increase was a growth of 38 per cent.

The total value of the domestic animals was reported as $133,219,000 in 1910, as against $97,424,000, or 35.7 per cent.

The poultry were valued at $7,674,000 in 1910, as compared with $4,483,000 in 1900, the gain being $3,191,000, or 71.2 per cent.

The bees were valued at $478,000 in 1910, and $532,000 in 1900, a decrease of $54,000, or 10 per cent.

These figures are gleaned from the statistics relative to domestic animals, poultry and bees on farms in the state in the thirteenth decennial census, which was issued by Acting Director Falkner.

The mule, the pride of Missouri, is the banner animal of Pennsylvania, for in the ten years from 1900 to 1910 it increased 120.7 per cent.

The mule, termed a lazy, care-free animal, far outdid the "busy" bee, for the bee lost 10 per cent in value, and the mule had to assist him in making it up and putting the state ahead with an aggregate increase of 33 per cent in the ten years.

The value of mules in the state in 1910 was $6,418,274, and the bee only $478,174.

Horses and colts led in total value, with $67,986,975, with cattle next, $47,202,089, with swine, poultry and mules following in the order named.

Street car power and light current was off nearly an hour while an extension was fitted to the power house intake pipe.

CHAPTER V.

THE POLICE PLAY THEIR HAND.

It would be an indictment of the reader's perspicacity to inform him that Payton's story about the breaking down of an imaginary aero and the call to him for aid was a pure invention.

It will be remembered that Payton in his wireless telephone conversation with Mr. Grayman had appointed a rendezvous for the second day after that of the discovery of the abduction. He had no intention of completing the transaction at that meeting—if meeting there should be. As he had said, he would arrange for the payment of the ransom and the surrender of the prisoner to take place elsewhere. That was an invariable feature of Payton's system which served to baffle those who sought to trap him.

His first concern was to get a meeting with the person who was to pay. If he succeeded in that he depended on twenty things to aid him in the subsequent negotiations, his extraordinary cunning and his impressive personality playing the principal parts.

He knew the character of William Grayman and his extreme fondness for his daughter. Of course this last was his best lever. Yet his demand for $10,000,000 was so enormous that he knew it would require all of his matchless dexterity in managing men and in mastering events to enable him to get the money.

To begin with, it was on its face a thing of extreme improbability that the famous billionaire, whose shrewdness was a byword, would trust himself in the hands of an outlaw.

It was also perfectly certain that Grayman would call in the aid of the police. That, however, did not trouble Payton. He had uttered no vain boast when he said that nobody had ever succeeded in running him down, and he had the most excellent reasons for his belief that nobody ever would. The only question in his mind was whether Grayman would go to the rendezvous at all.

Any other man than Payton would have assumed without arguing the matter that Grayman would not go. But Payton was a master reader of human nature. He knew that Grayman could not leave things as they were. He must rescue his daughter.

So he set out in the Chameleon from Tribes Hill, very confident that Mr. Grayman would be there—whatever company he might have. In regard to this Payton had means of knowledge, the nature of which will appear later.

Tribes Hill, a place famous in Indian tradition, lies in the old Hohokam territory in Montgomery county, N. Y. The distance between this place and Payton's lodge was great, but Payton had plenty of time at his disposal—and, indeed, time to spare—for the Chameleon was one of the swiftest crafts afloat and could under pressure make 140 miles an hour. There were few aers at that time which could keep within sight of her.

So he set out at a leisurely gait, putting the flier in trim for either fighting or running away, as occasion might require.

Nor was Payton mistaken in his reasoning about what Mr. Grayman would do. The New York commissioner had gone to work with great energy upon his problem, and here is the result of his cogitation as he reported it to Mr. Grayman twenty-four hours after their first conference. "Mr. Grayman," he said, wearing a satisfied smile as he entered the billionaire's sanctum, "I think that the Sky Pirate has carried his pitcher once too often to the fountain in venturing into New York. I believe that we shall get him."

"Well, well," exclaimed Grayman testily. "You seem to have changed your mind. What's your plan?"

"It's just this," said the commissioner. "I have been with four of my men to Tribes Hill to look over the ground. Payton has been cunning. I must allow, but he has not hitherto had to deal with the metropolitan police. The bluff where he has promised to meet you is bare and unapproachable except under Payton's eyes. But there are woods not far off—"

"Wait a moment," said the billionaire. "You seem to be assuming that I am fool enough to put myself into his grasp. You speak of his meeting me. It is you that he must meet."

The commissioner sat down and assumed a more confidential tone.

"Mr. Grayman," he said, "if you do not go, nothing can be done. No make-up to represent you would deceive this fellow. All of these kidnappers are too sharp for that, and he above all. If you are not willing to go I shall have to throw up the job."

Mr. Grayman made no immediate reply, but sat meditating. "It is true," he said at last, "that I have never allowed an affair of this importance to be conducted without my personal presence. But could I not be concealed somewhere near?"

"Impossible! You must be there openly or not at all. But let me assure you that you have nothing to fear. We can protect you."

"Suppose he should attempt to run away with me also? Do you know what that means?"

"I know perfectly well, Mr. Grayman, the importance of your person. But in this case you would have nothing to fear. Payton would never dream of running away with you. What would he gain by that, supposing he could do it with me and my men there ready to interfere? Nothing whatever. It would be the ruin of his negotiation."

"Well," Grayman said, "perhaps you are right. But, come, tell me your plan and then I'll see."

"As I was just telling you," resumed the commissioner, "there are woods not far from the bluff in which men and aers can be concealed. Now, my plan is to take four swift police department fliers and hide them in those woods. Moreover, I shall have a dozen sharpshooters concealed in the treetops. He will drop down over the bluff in his aero and keep it hovering near during his conference with you. Then when you have him engaged in talk my men at a signal will drop him in his tracks."

"Hold on!" said Mr. Grayman. "You are going too fast now. If you kill Payton, how are we going to find my daughter?"

"By capturing the Chameleon and compelling his men to reveal his hide-out places."

"But perhaps they won't talk."

"We have means of making men talk," said the commissioner grimly.

"Perhaps you have, but I don't like that part of the plan. It is too dangerous for my daughter. She would be killed for vengeance. But the aers are good. Go on with that part of the scheme, keeping your sharpshooters for an emergency. But why not take more aers? How many has the police department?"

"Eight. But it would be impossible to conceal more than four of them. I can dispose four in such a way as to cut off retreat in every direction. The aers, with power up, will be hidden just in the tops of the trees."

"You know we must not fail," Grayman said.

"We shall not fail," was the confident reply.

Still, Mr. Grayman was half disposed to reject the scheme and try something else. But he could think of nothing else, and then his daughter's absence and her imminent danger smote his heart.

"Done!" he said decisively. "I'll try it."

"Then," remarked the commissioner, much gratified, "I'll send off the aers tonight in order that nobody shall witness their arrival. Their commanders, who are the men that accompanied me to Tribes Hill, know exactly what to do. They will prepare the ambush and be ready for work in the morning."

"How many men will you have in all?"

"Thirty-six will go in the aers, of whom twenty-eight will be armed to the teeth. The twelve marksmen will be sent on by train in various disguises. We ourselves will take the midnight express for Albany, and a local train will bring us to Tribes Hill early in the morning."

The commissioner had learned that the full complement of the Chameleon, including her commander, was ten men. Accordingly he could count upon having three to one in a fight.

Thus the matter was arranged. When William Grayman said "Yes" to any proposition he wanted to have it carried into effect instantly.

No time was lost in concealing the fliers among the tops of the trees in the neighboring woods on both sides of the Mohawk.

Once in position they were anchored with guys, which could be severed in an instant, and were disguised with leaves and fresh cut branches to conceal them from prying eyes. They were so placed as not to be hampered in getting away at full speed, and their high power drivers could be turned on almost instantaneously. Of the crew of nine men which each aero carried, seven were there for fighting purposes only, and they carried automatic arms of the latest pattern. The other two were engineer and steersman. By judicious selection of positions an aero was stationed at each point of the compass, their average distance from the bluff—where the meeting was to take place—hardly exceeding a quarter of a mile. The commissioner's principal dependence was on surprise. He calculated that Payton seeing no aero near would boldly descend to the bluff and fall straight into the trap, because the police, getting into motion simultaneously at a signal, would be upon him from all sides before he was aware of their presence.

The signal was to be a white handkerchief waved by the commissioner himself from a point which he had selected not far from the bluff and which could be seen from each of the aers. One thing which the commissioner had not thought of arranging—and it was a capital error, as the sequel will show—was to place the aers so that their crews would have one another always in view. As it turned out, when they were once in position they could not see each other at all.

Dawn comes early in June, and the commanders of the fliers had hardly completed their arrangements and settled down for a long wait when a pale streak illumined the heavens in the east.

"Boys, keep quiet now," said the captain in charge of the aero which was stationed on the south side of the Mohawk, farthest west. "Daylight is beginning, and there must be no noise."

It was Captain Patrick Phelan, one of the bravest officers on the New York force.

Captain Phelan's men had obeyed his injunction and were keeping quiet. Most of them were lying on their backs looking up through the narrow interstices in the canopy of leaves with which they had covered their craft. Their arms were conveniently stacked in the center of the deck. Suddenly a shadow fell over them. Before a man could count five the branches were brushed away and an aero dropped beside them. In a moment nine men stood in a circle around their stacked arms, with pistols leveled at their heads. Half of the policemen were not yet on their feet.

"This game is up, boys," said the leader of the boarders. "I'll blow out the brains of the first man that utters a sound. Up with your hands."

Captain Phelan half drew a pistol from his holster, when the weapon in the hand of the leader who had spoken flashed, with the wicked snap of the modern arm of precision, not a dozen rods away, and the gallant officer fell with a bullet through his brain. It was all over in half a minute. Captain Phelan was dead, and his eight men, including the engineer and steersman, were helpless prisoners on their own deck. The element of surprise had played even a greater part in this brief tragedy than the commissioner had expected. Alfonso Payton had begun to turn the tables on his foes with his usual plan. But as yet he had by no means finished the job.

"Aboard!" he commanded sharply. His men sprang upon the Chameleon, and she was away in a flash. Running low again, she headed down the river for a second piece of woods, where another of the hidden aers floated among the treetops. Here a similar scene was enacted. Even more utterly unprepared than their unfortunate comrades, these policemen were taken an early breakfast. Some of them were knocked over with the cups in their hands.

Captain Billings, their commander, was seized from behind by Payton before he even knew that an enemy was aboard. Not a man had a weapon ready, and not a shot was fired. The captives were gagged and bound like the others, and the Chameleon was off again for her third victim, on the north side of the river.

This time there was a fight, but a most unequal one, because the surprise was virtually as complete as in the first two cases. The Chameleon had indeed been seen a quarter of a minute before the attack, but unluckily she was mistaken by Captain Campbell for one of his consorts, and while he was beating his brains to understand what she wanted there Payton and his men leaped aboard almost unopposed.

Even then Campbell probably never comprehended that it was the famous Sky Pirate who had attacked him. He had no time to think of anything except the fact there was an attack, and, having his pistol in his hand, he shot the first man who put his foot on his deck.

Immediately a bullet passed through his own heart. His men rallied gallantly, but only three of them succeeded in getting hold of their weapons. Payton pushed the assault like a demon. His pistol leveled two of these men with shots so nearly simultaneous that their reports blended. The third was brained with his own weapon by one of the Chameleon's crew, who showed the strength and agility of an acrobat. In the meantime the other five, being unable to reach their weapons, were easily overpowered, gagged and bound.

Not a sound of this struggle reached the fourth aero, something less than a third of a mile distant. Indeed, the shots could not have been heard as far as the edge of the little woodland in which the fight occurred. This, by the way, is one of the disadvantages of our modern firearms—if they do not betray one's location to the enemy, they equally fail to convey information to friends.

The fourth aero, under Captain Burns, was situated westward from the bluff. Payton once more ran the Chameleon near the ground until he reached the edge of the woods, then rose quickly above the trees, located his prey in spite of its fancied security and was upon it without the slightest warning having been given. Here again the men were at breakfast, and the scene was almost a duplicate of that enacted at the second assault.

In every case Payton was careful to leave the little flags, which were to indicate to the commissioner the presence of his aers at their prescribed posts, undisturbed.

No sooner were Burns and his men secured than the Chameleon rose almost vertically in the air to a great elevation and then, assuming her sky blue dress, for the sun was rising in a cloudless heaven, soared off southward. When he had got well beyond eye shot from Tribes Hill Payton ordered the aero to hover over the farm checked township of Florida and sent his men to breakfast.

"A pretty good morning's performance," he said, laughing in his hearty manner and addressing the steersman, who, in each case, had been the only one left in charge of the Chameleon, all the others being engaged in the fight and capture.

The steersman's only reply was a delighted grin. Like his comrades, he fairly worshipped his peerless commander.

"So this is the metropolitan police!" Payton continued with a sneer. "And their commissioner thought that he could take me in! I'm half inclined to give him a taste of my jug, when he arrives with his billionnaire client."

The fact was, as subsequent investigation fully developed and as I have already hinted, that Payton knew the commissioner's plan through the medium of his spies, whom he had everywhere in wireless communication. So instead of being trapped, he had himself turned trapper. Now he only awaited the arrival of the commissioner and Mr. Grayman to complete his achievement.

He knew the hour when the local train would arrive from Albany, and he took his measures accordingly.

SUCCESS WITH SHORTHORN CATTLE.

A good born full of Shorthorn cattle and prosperity seem to go in the same class, writes J. E. Taylor in the New England Homestead. Some twelve years ago Roscoe (J. Bigelow, a Maine farmer, was plodding along trying to farm. One day he came to a realizing sense that if he was going to be a farmer he was going to be a good one. He made up his mind that pure bloods of whatever breed were the only kind to keep. He knew where he could buy a young heifer which was a Short-horn. He watched that heifer grow and saw that she was going to make a beautiful cow. Six months after she had her first calf she made seven pounds of butter a week. She was large and of excellent proportions, and Mr. Bigelow realized that he had in the Shorthorn the combined qualities of a good milk and beef.

Mr. Bigelow has in his barn now fifteen head of Shorthorn cattle. He has two yoke of oxen. One yoke is two years old, girls six feet ten inches and weighs 3,000 pounds. The other yoke of three-year-olds girls seven feet two inches and weighs 3,200 pounds. He has a bull thirteen months old that girls six feet and one inch. The sire was Mister Lad, who at one time sold for $1,000, and when he was four years old he weighed 2,300 pounds and girthed eight feet. Mr. Bigelow has a heifer twelve and a half months old that girls five feet three inches. He has a two-year-old heifer that as a yearling won the state championship at the Maine fairs and a cow with calf that won the state championship.

The value of Shorthorns as milk producers continues to be a much discussed question. Some dairymen pin their faith to the breed, while the general opinion leans toward cows specially bred for milk production, notably Holsteins, Jerseys, Guernseys, Ayrshires and Alderneys. The fine Shorthorn bull here shown is of the beef type. He is Village Diamond, owned by the Duke of Portland, and was champion at the Leeds show.

In breeding Mr. Bigelow aims to see that the animal has good length, large joints and carries the head well above the level of the body. He wants them wide between the eyes, heads short and fairly fine at the muzzle, back level, barrel round, with full body and tall not set too high.

In discussing the matter of raising cattle Mr. Bigelow says: "Of course I have been successful. There is no reason why I shouldn't have been. I have worked for it. This work did not all consist of choosing good cattle, but largely in caring for them. I have saved a good deal by raising my own grain, especially corn. This corn has been a great deal better than what I could have bought. I have ground it with the cob and fed it to them as a regular ration when not out to pasture, giving them about six quarts a day. The cob has had a tendency to tone up the stomach and act as a regulator for the rest of the feed."

Manicuring the Bull.

The feet of a bull demand more attention, especially if he is rather closely confined and getting a liberal supply of grain. The feet should be trimmed so that the animal always has the proper use of them. Some bulls are as easily handled as a gentle horse, and their feet can be trimmed without the slightest difficulty. However, this is rather the exception than the rule. The most satisfactory way is to put the animal in stocks and raise it off its feet. Then by strapping the foot to be trimmed solid to a beam so that the sole will be facing upward the operation can be executed with pliers and chisel in a few minutes. Care should be taken to avoid cutting too deep or into the sensitive part of the foot, as this would be very likely to cause bleeding and lameness.—Professor F. C. Minkler, New Jersey.

Treatment For Lice on Pigs.

Pigs on grass are usually quite free from diseases and parasites. However, we always have to look out for lice. Whenever any lice are seen pen the pigs up in a small yard at the corner of the pen and daub crude oil on them with a broom. A splash on the face, one down the back and a couple on each side are all that are required. Then the pigs, which are crowded closely, by squirming and wriggling among the others, smear themselves quite thoroughly. One man can apply the oil very quickly and effectively with a broom.

SAYS SUGAR WAR PARTED FAMILY

MOFF SPEAKS FOR COMBINE

Declares Trust Did Not Discriminate in the Buying of Raw Sugar in the South.

New York, July 26.—Henry C. Moff, purchasing agent for and a director of the American Sugar Refining company, who was a witness before the special congressional committee investigating the so-called sugar trust, declared that in making purchases of sugar the company never discriminated against any planters, never "punished" any Louisiana planters for selling sugar to the independent refiners, and never arbitrarily fixed the purchasing price of sugar.

After Mr. Moff testified, Claus A. Spreckels was recalled to the stand, where he identified some letters to be placed in evidence. "And these are the letters," he said, "that resulted in a break between my father and my brothers that lasted fifteen years, until five years ago, when my father sent for me and told me he had found these people all wrong, and that he had made the mistake of his life."

Joseph E. Freeman, secretary of the American Sugar Refining company, was then recalled. He said he knew nothing of the alleged mutilation of the minutes of the American Sugar Refining company.

Mr. Moff, who was elected a director following the death of H. O. Havemeyer, said he did much of the correspondence for Mr. Havemeyer, but his memory was so treacherous that he could not recall any of the correspondence relative to the acquiring of the independents.

Asked about the company's purchases of sugar in Louisiana, Mr. Moff said:

"We paid the New York price less the freight rate to New York, which is about 15 cents a hundred pounds."

"Yet you used much of that Louisiana sugar in your New Orleans refinery and did not send it to New York?"

"Oh! We sent a great deal to New York."

Mr. Moff said that he would guarantee to purchase in Louisiana for any independent all the sugar they wanted if they paid the American's price, or 1.32 more and had the cash. Other witnesses had said the planters were afraid to sell to the independents because if they did they would be boycotted by the American, which is the largest purchaser.

Mr. Moff insisted that if there had been any discrimination against any of the Louisiana planters or boycotting of any of them it had been done by the American Sugar Refining company's local purchasing agent there and not with the knowledge or consent of the company.

"So far as I know no instructions were ever given any of our refineries, with a total capacity of 40,000 barrels, to limit their production," he said.

"Of course we give directions from time to time to reduce or increase their output, according to the stocks on hand, the demand and the consumption. These instructions, the witness added, are given by the president."

"Why do you pay the Louisiana planters the New York price less the freight rate when you refine most of that sugar in New Orleans?"

"We have to buy approximately 200,000 tons of the total crop of 300,000 tons within three months. Our refining capacity at New Orleans is only 75,000 tons for that time, and the result is that we have to store from 75,000 to 100,000 tons of raw sugar. We must take all the risks of fire, deterioration and the change in marketing price. We figure that the freight rate pays us for this trouble, risk and expense."

GRANDMOTHERS' BEAUTIFUL HAIR

Color and Beauty of the Hair Preserved with a Harmless Remedy Made from Sage.

Druggists everywhere comment on the fact that they are selling large quantities of sage for making old-fashioned "sage tea," such as was used by our grandmothers for promoting the growth of their hair, making it fluffy and beautiful and restoring its natural color.

The demand for this well-known herb for this purpose has been so great that one manufacturer has taken advantage of the fact and has placed on the market an ideal "Sage Tea," containing sulphur, a valuable remedy for dandruff and scalp rashes, and a 1-1-1 remedy, called "Sage and Sulphur Hair Remedy." The manufacturers of this remedy authorize druggists to sell it under guarantee that the money will be refunded if it fails to do exactly as represented.

A gang of sharpers have been "working" a number of old soldiers and soldiers' widows in Kansas lately. The gaffers posed as representatives of the government who were introducing a new electric belt (price only $100), which they guaranteed would give long life and happiness, and they augmented their sales by promising that the government would increase the pensions of all purchasers. Just so long as suckers of this type run around loose they are bound to get caught.

There are two or three points in the artificial watering of gardens that it is well to keep in mind. One of these is that water should be put on growing vegetation only in the evening or early in the morning. Applied when the sun is shining brightly, it is likely to scald and kill garden stuff. Another point worth keeping in mind is that unless watering is kept up systematically during dry and heated spells it is often worse than no watering at all. And, lastly, it is important to remember that a frequent stirring of the surface soil, which will bring up subsoil moisture, is preferable in every way to an application of water without cultivation.

A SENSITIVE PAIR

By OLIVE EDNA MAY

Copyright by American Press Association, 1911.

This is a story of the old army in ante civil war times.

Among the graduates of the West Point Military academy class of 18—was Paul Lambert. He was adjutant of the corps, which is a prominent position among the cadets, and was graduated in the engineers. There was present at the graduating exercises that year Florence Rutherford, a young lady equally prominent with Lambert. The two had met there in June once before and had been much together.

Perhaps there is no place more conducive to love-making than a military post, and for the purpose West Point stands pre-eminent on account of the youth of those assembled. The cadets are in camp near the hotel, and when they are on leave couples may be seen on the piazza or starting up to old Fort Putnam or down Flirtation walk—indeed, anywhere they like within "bounds."

Paul Lambert and Florence Rutherford were one of these couples and much observed for their physical beauty. As soon as Lambert was given his commission he made a proposition of marriage to Miss Rutherford. He had been in doubt as to his acceptance, for the girl, though she permitted his attentions whenever he talked "spoon"—to use a slang phrase—was very chary of a response. But every lover is in doubt until he receives a consent. Lambert when he was refused received as great a blow as if he had been sure of an acceptance.

The girl was very conscientious and the man very sensitive. She took too much pains in interrogating her feelings, and he attached too much importance to her refusal. Had he persevered she would have yielded. But our paths in life are determined often by some small incident. The worlds of these two persons were determined by Lambert's failure to ask the same question twice. A consent upon the second asking would have made him inexpressibly happy. The reason he did not ask again was because he had been so sure of himself that he considered that the girl could not fail to recognize her own feelings. Had she felt toward him as he felt toward her there could be no mistaking the emotion.

The consequence of this reasoning on both sides was that two persons who seemed to have been made for each other were kept apart and consequently entered upon lives the honey of which had been extracted. Lambert never dreamed that Miss Rutherford regretted her decision the moment it had been made, and she could not understand how, if he loved her, he should be content without her. And if he was not content without her he must surely try to win her. This similar reasoning in each, though nothing in itself, served to make a chasm between them.

Five years passed, during which neither of the lovers married. Then Miss Rutherford, being assured by a friend of Lambert that he would never marry, taking the reason for granted, wrote her lover a note, reopening the case.

But what was her surprise to receive a reply ignoring what she had intended. All her pride revolted at having so demeaned herself. She considered that she had been served aright for attempting to recall a man she had refused, and she did not blame him for having declined what was virtually an offer.

Nothing could have been more touching than the note written by Lambert. There was the same melancholy in it he had shown ever since he had been refused. He did not refer to that refusal or its consequences. He referred to life as incessantly depressing in his case, but made no intimation as to the cause. Had he done so it would have left a loophole for another communication from Miss Rutherford that might have led to a union between the two. As it was, it sealed her lips on the subject.

There was one suspicion in Miss Rutherford's mind that made her think that Lambert had a reason for not reopening his affair with her. At the time her letter was sent Lambert was in attendance upon his father, who was a confirmed invalid. She fancied that Lambert might feel that he should permit nothing to interfere with his giving all his devotion to his parent.

Then she heard that the father had died, and a faint hope sprang up in her breast that if there had been such a cause it was now removed. But time passed, and she heard nothing from her lover. Then she settled down to the belief that Lambert had grown away from his love for her.

But he certainly could not have come to love any one else, for he became a recluse. He left the army and shut himself up in a house by himself. When the Cuban-American war came on he re-entered the service, and by the way he exposed himself his brother officers suspected that he was trying to get himself killed. Finally during the last fighting before Santiago he was mortally wounded and died in a few days.

Miss Rutherford, though she did not put on widow's weeds, considered herself a widow. One day she was notified that she was heir to a considerable estate left her by Paul Lambert. With the papers handed her was a letter informing her that his father previous to his death had informed him that he (Paul) was illegitimate.

Driving Wisdom.

Don't attempt to put the plodding draft horse on the road, neither put the driver into heavy field work.

Don't work the medium sized team all day in the fields, then drive it to town that evening.

Don't expect a colt to respond readily to every pull of the lines, but first let him become accustomed to the new order of things. He isn't used to a piece of iron in his mouth, nor does he understand why he should turn his head first one way, then another.

The Scrap Book

A Bit of Splay.

The feminine end of a well known vaudeville team is in the habit of jotting down any piece of "business" she thinks would be of value in their act. One Sunday in church the service was neglected for a minute and an idea that had just come to mind was duly entered in the thing most handy—namely, the prayer book. And the prayer book was left behind.

The next Sunday she went back to the same church, intending to inquire for the book at the end of the service. The clergyman, however, anticipated this by speaking of a prayer book found the Sunday before.

"Our only means of identification," he said, "is a rather peculiar memorandum in the rear of the book. 'When the pistol goes off kick father in the face.'"

The prayer book was never claimed—Saturday Evening Post.

The Happiest Heart.

Who drives the horses of the sun
Shall lord it but a day.
Better the lowly deed were done
And kept the humble way.

The dust will hide the sword of fame.
The dust will hide the crown.
Aye, none shall nail so high his name
Time will not tear it down.

The happiest heart that ever beat
Was in some quiet breast
That found the common daylight sweet
And left to heaven the rest.
—John Vance Cheney.

Right Up to Date.

The German proprietor of a "wet goods emporium" was bemoaning the fact that an Irish rival was getting most of the business of the neighborhood.

"You're not progressive enough, Hans," a customer told him. "Gillhooley's got you beat a mile. That sign in his window, 'Ticker Inside,' alone draws a lot of business."

The next day the Dutchman's window blossomed out with a big sign, "Ticker Inside." The same customer soon came in and expressed his approval that Hans was thus "getting wise" to the requirements of the business.

"But where is the ticker?" he asked, looking around.

"Here it is," said the Dutchman solemnly, and he pointed to the clock—Lippincott's.

Real and Ideal.

When Henry Pettit's play, "The Sailor's Knot," was being put on, Mr. George Barrett was engaged to play the part of a sailor. One of his duties was to come on the stage and hand some papers to the hero, played by Charles Warner. At the first rehearsal Barrett came on in an easy, natural way, saluted and handed his officer the papers.

"No, no, no, no," cried Warner. "That won't do at all. No sailor ever walked like that or saluted like that."

Mr. Barrett grinned, and at the same moment there came a shriek of laughter from the wings, where Sir Augustus Harris, the then stage manager, was watching the rehearsal.

"What's the matter?" demanded Warner, wheeling round.

"Nothing, oh, nothing," Harris replied soothingly; "only that Mr. Barrett has been in the navy for several years and has only just retired."—London Mail.

What, Never?

There was a time when the vogue of "Pinafore" was simply amazing. Here is an ironical note from a newspaper of the time: "At present there are forty-two companies playing 'Pinafore.' Companies formed after 6 p. m. yesterday are not included." Its catch phrase, "What, never? Well, hardly ever," was deadly. It is told, for instance, that one editor barred his staff from using it. "It has occurred twenty times in as many articles yesterday. Never let me see it used again." "What, never?" was the unanimous question. "Well, hardly ever," replied the wretched man.—Bookman.

Had Seen One.

An English comedian told of appearing before a swell London audience at the house of a noble lord. The language of his listeners made him feel not too happy, and he was glad to get through and retire to the dressing room allotted him. While he was removing the grease paint a very young peer who had strolled after him stood watching the process. He told the comedian in the most approved drawl that some of his sayings had really been rather funny, "especially that one, you know, where your wife made a pancake on a gridiron and the pancake slipped through and put the fire out. That made me laugh awfully, because I know what a gridiron is. I have seen one."

Forgot a Detail.

An absentminded professor who shall be nameless was reading about a great feat of engineering that aroused his enthusiasm. Suddenly he sprang from his chair and advanced toward his wife. His manner betrayed his excitement.

"Now, listen to me, wife," he said, "and I do not want you to oppose me. Do you hear?"

"Yes, dear. What is it, then?"

"Now, no opposition, mind! I wish the boy to be an engineer."

"But, my dear, what are you talking about? We haven't any boy."

"Oh, yes, that is so. I had forgotten that," said the professor as he resumed his seat in the rocking chair.

Train the Colts.

Train the colts, don't break them. Many a good horse has been spoiled by breaking him when a colt. Get his mouth accustomed to the bit before a harness is put on him. Be gentle and patient, and you can make a good horse out of almost any colt.

Horses Fashionable.

Fashionable folks are taking up horses again, the automobile having become too common for them. And farmers are buying automobiles to save their horses.

GROWING SWINE.

Secret of Success Is Pure Bred Stock and Proper Food.

Why more farmers do not make a specialty of raising swine is a mystery to me, and why more of them do not choose the thoroughbred instead of the scrub is still a greater mystery, writes a Pennsylvania hog grower in Farm Journal. It costs no more to feed a thoroughbred than a grade or scrub—in fact, not so much—and its progeny is always worth several dollars apiece more for breeding purposes than those of no particular breed.

I aim to get my spring pigs on pasture as soon as possible. An acre of alfalfa ought to support twenty pigs through five or six months in the year. Clover will do nearly as well. But it is a good plan to provide some other pasture for early spring and late summer. For the spring there is nothing better than rye. Pigs farrowed in March can be turned into the rye with their mothers as soon as they are old enough to follow, and in a few days will learn to eat.

In the fall when the clover and alfalfa have become dry and woody I feed fodder corn which has not been planted so thick that it will not grow a large percentage of ears. This I feed in the pens in addition to a thin slop of cornmeal and middlings. The cornmeal is fed sloppy and sparingly at first, but gradually increased until they are getting all they will clean up three times a day. I use plenty of water at first to make a thin slop, but later use only enough to make a crumpled dough.

Having no pasture for my fall pigs I do the next best thing—use a substitute. My experience has been that in order to grow a strong, thrifty hog with plenty of stamina and muscle you have got to give him a bulky food in connection with the concentrate, the same as you do other stock.

I do not do as the majority of feeders do—feed the entire clover or alfalfa—as I find they waste too much, and I never have any to waste. All hay is well shaken in the barn before it is thrown down the chutes for horses and cattle. These blossoms and leaves are swept up daily and sacked, and later taken to the hog entry. A quantity of these leaves and blossoms is mixed with cornmeal and middlings and thoroughly wet with hot water.

I never knew what it was to have fall pigs that would actually grow until I began using the foregoing method of feeding. They are called to chew the food which, if fed in slop, they would gulp down in a few minutes. The large quantities of this mixture a thriving bunch of shotes will consume daily would make some of those fellows who laugh at the idea of feeding hay to hogs open their eyes.

Breeding For Fall Pigs.

Sows that are to be bred for fall litters will need rest and an abundance of nutritious feed to prepare them for the second litter. An open pasture with plenty of green, succulent feed such as clover and alfalfa is best. As for grain, any of the common feeds rich in protein will do. If corn is the sole grain fed, then some protein concentrate will be necessary. Actual practice has shown that breeding sows that get a ration high in protein do far better than those whose feed lacks the bone and muscle building elements found in protein.

The sows intended for fall litters should be bred as early as possible in order that the pigs will arrive in sufficient time to get a good start before actual winter comes. It will be found easier to bring sows up to fall farrowing and in better condition than is the case with spring litters. The reason for this lies in the unlimited amounts of green succulent feed that can be furnished and in the open air life that is possible for the sows during that time.—H. E. McCartney in Farm and Fireside.
